Statistics of the Municipal Institutions of the English Towns. By JOSEPH FLETCHER, Esq., of the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Hon. Sec.

[Read before the Statistical Society of London: Present, H. R. H. Prince Albert, Patron.
June 20th, 1842.]

AMONG the "facts which illustrate the condition and prospects of Society," scarcely any can be more interesting than those of its municipal organization in local communities for the purposes of peace and justice, and for the performance of labours required for the common health and convenience. This organization intervenes between the domestic hearth and the central authority of the State; and, in Great Britain, undoubtedly nourishes that national love of a regulated freedom, which has its birth in the virtues of home, and its fullest life in a heartfelt attachment to the throne.

The Municipal Institutions of England, including Wales, in the widest sense of the term "Municipal," may be said to include all its existing organization for local government, whether into counties, hundreds, poor-law unions, parishes, or towns corporate. But the latter have, under great political vicissitudes, inherited so much the most vigorous municipal spirit, that a study of their recent and their present state, is, perhaps, the best introduction to a knowledge of the very intricate systems of local government, among which the whole country is divided. For such a study, the Reports of the Municipal Commissioners, published by Parliament in 1835, and to which a copious Analysis, from the hand of the writer, was subsequently added, combined with the statute then passed for remodelling the institutions of the principal corporate towns,* the Acts by which this statute has since been amended,† and several returns recently made to Parliament, afford valuable materials, which it is the purpose of the present analysis to render available.

The earliest form of association in the Anglo-Saxon towns, appears to have been the same which prevailed throughout England, and among the Teutonic races generally, namely, that of "freo-borh," or, in Anglo-Norman terms, "frank-pledge," whereby the freemen of each locality were bound together in small communities of equal number, (here called

* 5 & 6 Wm. IV., c. 76.

† 6 & 7 Wm. IV., cc. 103, 104; 1 Vict. cc. 78, 81.

"tithings,") which, again, were combined together in larger communities of equal numbers (here called "hundreds," or, "wapentakes,") and these, finally into shires and burghs, forming integral portions of a state. The conditions of their common bond were, truth to each other and to their Sovereign; the latter involving mutual responsibility to the State for their conduct; a principle which is still in active operation in the liability of a hundred to make good damage riotously committed within its limits. The leet court of the hundred, in which the whole free population appeared, was, perhaps, the earliest local court of justice and police; but in the largest cities, comprising several hundreds, which appear to have constituted the earliest "wards," the principal court appears to have been the popular assembly of the "burghmote," or "portmote," equal in authority with the shire-mote, and in London designated the "hus-ting," from its being very early held in the town—"house," or "guildhall." The mode of accepting the statutes made by the Witan (or king's council), states Sir Francis Palgrave, and of carrying them into effect, depended upon the deliberations of the burghmoot, and the discretion of its members; and London was as much entitled to the name of a distinct state or community, as the Kentish Kingdom.* Of courts designated Burghmote or Portmote Courts, the Commissioners describe six to be still held; of Hundred Courts they mention twelve, of which six are in use; and of Borough Leet Courts 125, of which nearly the whole are in use.†

These original franchises of the Anglo-Saxon boroughs, being the common-law rights of the whole free population, appear to have been held under no express charters from the Sovereign; and for a long period after the Conquest, the internal government of the English boroughs was left to their ancient customs, and the modifications of these customs which each community voluntarily made; all the earliest charters of the Norman kings and great lords, merely giving or conferring as "privileges," which they had now, in great measure, really become, the very common-law rights of which these free communities had long been in the enjoyment. These charters, brief as they are, contain invaluable indications of what the usual "privileges" then were; and some, granted to the boroughs of the most Danish part of the country, contain a curious record of the Germanic origin of their institutions, in the permission to the burgesses to have their "hans-hus," or "hanse-house;" a designation for the hall of the common mercatory guild, similar to that which formed the germ of the institutions of the Hanse Towns. The Commissioners' Reports describe the common assemblies of five boroughs as still being called, "Guilds;" and the Guild Merchant is mentioned in 19 others, though in only five has it now any existence; in Bristol and in York, in the form of a corporation of merchant adventurers.‡

The royal boroughs, or boroughs of ancient demesne, which comprised, in the early Norman times, all the principal trading towns, and had the king, alone, for their lord, were the examples of municipal freedom specially cited by the charters of enfranchisement granted by the barons to the smaller and more remote towns, rising, perhaps, under the very walls of their castles. Ninety-eight boroughs are stated in the Commissioners' Reports to claim a prescriptive origin for their institutions ;* and no fewer than 49 different barons are mentioned in various of the Reports as giving charters to smaller boroughs at an early period.† The circumstances under which these baronial boroughs commonly came at length under the protection of the Crown, do not admit of present elucidation ; but it may be noticed that a very curious section of our municipal history is presented by taking the existing or recent institutions of the English boroughs, from the smallest to the largest, in the order in which their growth ceased, or was stopped.

To hold their town at fee-farm, undisturbed by any officer whatever, so long as they paid their rent, was a chief item in these early contracts between the inhabitants and their lord, whether the king himself, or one of his great barons ; and "they," says Madox, "were deemed townsmen, who had a settled dwelling in the town, who merchandized there, who were of the hans, or guild, who were in scot and lot with the townsmen, and who used and enjoyed the liberties and free customs of the town."‡ Sometimes special privileges were granted, but they were chiefly such as regarded the burgess communities in their external relations ; and most frequently these earliest charters bear, that the burgesses to whom they are directed, shall either have all their ancient customs, or those of one of the principal cities of London, York, Winchester, &c., where the ancient freedoms had been best preserved, and were best known. Whether expressed, or understood in general terms, these charters secured to the grantees, among the primary privileges, that their town should be a free borough, i. e., the inhabitants should be free from all servile duties ; that the townsmen should have a free trade, and exemption from toll in every part of the king's dominions ; that all the land within their limits should be the property of the community, such as was not already occupied by their tenements, forming common land, off which portions might be sold for building, &c., by the assent of the community, to their profit, and to the improvement of the town ; that the townsmen should answer to the king for his ferm by their own mayor, bailiff, or other compeer, at the King's Exchequer ; frequently that all profits arising from fines, amercements, &c., in the borough Courts should belong to the community for their common benefit, and towards the payment of their ferm ; and that they should choose a mayor, bailiff, or portreeve, to be accepted by the Crown, to account at the Exchequer for the ferm, and to exercise the chief magisterial authority.

The charter of Henry I., son of the Conqueror, to the citizens of London, simply granted to them, with the sheriffwick of Middlesex, that they should not be impleaded without the walls, but only in their own popular court ; that they should be exempt from danegeit, from murder (or the compensation for murder where the homicide was not produced), and from being compelled to wage battle in their suits, which should, on the contrary, be determined by oaths ; that no one, by any authority, should claim reception (hospicium) in the house of a citizen ; that the citizens should be everywhere exempt from toll, and enjoy all their sokes and customs ; that none should be amerced but in certain reasonable sums specified; that nothing should be pleaded by miskening in the hustings or folksmote, or other pleas, in the city; that they should hold their hustings weekly on Monday, and have satisfaction of all bonds, &c.; that they should recover unjust tolls taken of citizens, by naams, or legal reprisal, on goods belonging to the inhabitants of the offending place; that they should recover all debts due to them by decision in their own courts, and that they should hunt in the Chiltern, and in Middlesex and Surrey, as their ancestors did. With the exception of such as are purely local, the liberties specified in the above charter form the basis of every early endowment of "privileges" granted to the English boroughs, whether by exemplification of the previous customs of the place itself, or by reference to those of some other borough.

From the Conquest to the reign of Henry VI. the royal charters scarcely ever interfere with the internal constitution of the boroughs; and although certain subtleties in relation to "bodies corporate" began in the latter reign to appear in the charters, it was not until the time of the Tudors that interference with their internal affairs on the part of the Crown became general. During this long interval the ancient leets, folkmotes, or common halls, held before the chief officers chosen by the inhabitants themselves, appear to have formed at first the sole common councils and courts of justice; but in process of time some of the larger of these petty municipal republics erected within themselves representative constitutions, more or less aristocratic according to the success of local parties. And the exigencies which occasioned the devising of such constitutions is well described by the Act of the "immense community" of the common hall of London, in the seventh of Richard II., when the common council was put on its present footing, to the effect that as in such great assemblies things had been done more by clamour than by reason, the aldermen, when they were established for the year, should assemble their respective wards, and charge them to choose four of the most sufficient persons that are in their ward to be of the common council for the year ensuing, provided that of the whole number no more than eight should be of one mystery. Sometimes, both in the city of London and elsewhere, the mysteries, or trade guilds, were made the basis of the municipal representation; and the mysteries, or companies of trades, in 31 boroughs, are mentioned in the Commissioners' Reports; from which also it appears that they have yet some existence in no fewer than 20.

Whatever may have been the corruptions to which these home-grown institutions were necessarily liable, or whatever the local means, which, had the burgesses been left to themselves, they might ultimately have found of remedying their defects, their decline as instruments of local government was made sure and irretrievable by the augmentation of the political importance of the towns, which subjected their institutions to the conflicts of national as well as local parties. During the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, in the reigns of the Tudors and Stuarts, the internal affairs of the boroughs were, whenever opportunity offered, rearranged in the minutest detail by new charters, the effects of which, in bringing their constitutions towards one model, in which the governing council should be self-elect, will be seen by reference to the following table of the recent governing charters. (See p. 102-3.) This deterioration as instruments of local government was not designed, but merely incidental to operations upon the return of members to the House of Commons by the corporate towns, which was, in its origin, a municipal privilege.

But the predominance of the political character in the municipal authorities, and their alienation from large bodies of the inhabitants, although they retained the administration of justice, lost them to a great extent the public confidence as trustees for numerous measures of local improvement, to the execution of which no other body could otherwise have laid claim. About the period of the Revolution, therefore, some examples of earlier date began to be extensively followed, in the obtaining local Acts of Parliament, which erected separate corporations of trustees, generally under the name of "Commissioners," in the same towns with the old corporations, to carry out whatever new measures of municipal administration were felt to be requisite; the old municipal corporation being frequently allowed to nominate a certain proportion of the Commissioners from their own number. this succession of charters and local acts. Fewer of the more ancient constitutions would have appeared in the second of them, had not the boroughs, at the Revolution, generally repudiated the charters recently granted to them, after a surrender of their liberties before writs of quo warranto. No fewer than 52 are stated by the Commissioners to have done this, while 12 are described as retaining the new charters granted on this occasion by Charles II. and James II.*

Out of the 178 boroughs included in the schedules of the Corporation Act, no fewer than 108 are enumerated in Schedule E, as comprising bodies of "trustees appointed under sundry Acts of Parliament for paving, lighting, cleansing, watching, regulating, supplying with water, and improving" the whole or certain parts of such boroughs; and these trustees, under the 75th clause of that Act, may, if it shall seem to them expedient, transfer their powers to the remodelled borough councils; but the instances of such transfer, if there have been any, are very few. And although the ancient municipal institutions of all these boroughs are now placed upon one uniform plan, this division of the functions of local government between the municipal councils and the special trusts continues, therefore, to exist in a majority of them.

The total number of places in England and Wales, possessing ancient chartered or customary municipal institutions, was found by the Commissioners to be 263; but of these, 11 are not comprised in the accompanying tables; a deficiency which is of no consequence to our view of these institutions as a system, and which arises merely from the refusal of 2* to submit to any investigation, from 4† being left unreported by the Commissioner who visited them, from 4‡ unimportant places reported by the same Commissioner having been described at a much later period than the rest, and in a method quite peculiar, and from the City of London having been reserved by the Commissioners for a subsequent report, with a view to separate legislation, to which, however, its affairs have not yet been subjected. Of the remaining 252 places, 18 have municipal bodies which emanate merely from the court leet of a manorial lord; leaving 234 which are comprised in the preceding and in all the subsequent tables. The accompanying (pp. 105—118) are lists of the whole 263 municipal boroughs, with the statistics of their recent and present constitutions, their population, their criminal and civil jurisdictions, and their parliamentary representation, in so far as this is connected with their old municipal franchises. Intermingled with the first 234, which are throughout subjected to analysis, are 8 others, brought in from the two supplemental lists to make complete the alphabetical catalogue of the 178 boroughs included under the Corporation Act of the 5th and 6th of Will. IV. c. 76.

in brackets in the 1st List, to make the enumeration of those whose institutions have been remodelled by the Corporation Act at once complete.

These lists presents the following results :—

	No.	Population.
Towns with remodelled municipalities, represented in Parliament	144	2,023,592
Towns with remodelled municipalities, not represented in Parliament	34	171,572
Total of towns whose municipal institutions are remodelled by the 5th and 6th Will. IV. c. 76	178	2,195,164
Towns of smaller size whose municipal institutions are unaffected by the 5th and 6th Will. IV. c. 76, but which are represented in Parliament	19	28,045
Towns of smaller size whose municipal institutions are unaffected by the 5th and 6th Will. IV. c. 76, and which are not represented in Parliament, though possessed of a complete municipal existence	65	98,001
City of London, whose municipal institutions are unaffected by the 5th and 6th Will. IV. c. 76, although, of course, it is represented in Parliament	1	122,395
Total of municipal towns whose institutions are unaffected by the Corporations Act	85	248,441
Total of ancient municipal towns	263	2,443,605
	No.	Population.
Total of towns which are municipal and not parliamentary boroughs	99	269,573
Towns* which have recently obtained charters of incorporation under the 5th and 6th Will. IV. c. 76, giving them municipal institutions on the plan of that Act, and which are likewise represented in Parliament	5	472,285
Total of towns now possessing municipal institutions	268	2,915,890
Towns which have not municipal institutions of the character contemplated by the Corporation Act, although represented in Parliament :—
England	43	627,379
Wales (chiefly petty contributory boroughs)	21	73,371
	64	700,750
Metropolitan boroughs which are in like manner without corporate institutions, although represented in Parliament	7	1,389,193
Total of towns without municipal institutions though represented in Parliament	71	2,089,943
Total of towns represented in Parliament	169	4,736,260
Total of boroughs both municipal and parliamentary, or only the one or the other	339	5,005,833

The parliamentary representation is here referred to merely as the legal and recognised indication of the principal masses of our town population. As such, however, it does not pretend to be perfect, for there are a great number of market towns containing from 2000 to 6000 inhabitants, and some having nearer 10,000, which do not return members to Parliament, while many which are not so large possess the franchise.

* Birmingham, Manchester, Bolton, Devonport, and now, I believe, Sheffield.

But it will be gathered from the preceding statement that a municipal system, which, exclusive of the metropolis, comprises nearly three-fourths of the represented town population, with the addition of 269,573 not included in represented towns, is one which forms an important element in our institutions.

It will be seen that the population entered as that of the actual town and suburbs, as nearly as it can be estimated, frequently differs from that comprised within the old municipal borough, or even within the limits of the parliamentary borough under the Act to amend the representation, where these are adopted for the remodelled corporations. This fact, indeed, with the necessity of warding the larger boroughs on some definite plan, gave occasion for the appointment of the Municipal Boundary Commission, on the results of whose labours there has yet, however, been no legislation; and serious anomalies still exist with regard not only to the boundaries temporarily assumed by the Corporation Act, but also with regard to the wards assigned by the barristers appointed by the judges to revise the first registration of the new burgesses; since which the mayors have been the revising officers. The use of these wards is merely for the convenience of municipal elections. Eighty-nine boroughs, it will be seen, are thus divided into electoral districts, varying in number from 2 to 16, as follows:—

To show at a glance the great difference in the very basis of these institutions, between the old bodies corporate, and the municipal communities under the recent Act, the following tabular abstract has been made of the former modes of access to the freedom as compared with the present simple franchise, which is by occupancy of a house, warehouse, counting-house or shop, and payment of rates for three years, combined with residence in the borough, or within seven miles of it. The first portion of this table shows what the recent modes of access were in all the boroughs; the second separates from these the smaller boroughs in which these modes of access, and the whole municipal government, remain unaltered. With regard to the origin of this variety of claims, it may be observed, that, to the liberties granted to the townsmen and their heirs or successors, their sons and apprentices had necessarily, in early times, an inchoate right; and as their daughters or widows would not marry bondmen, if the community at large chose to admit their husbands by the claim of marriage only, custom would establish this right also. With regard to the right by purchase, it was obviously equitable that the burgesses, who had purchased the enjoyment of their liberties dearly, should not admit strangers to share in them and in their public property without paying a fine to the funds of the community. If the municipal body chose to admit a stranger without the payment of any fine, this was the right by gift; but all these claims, it is obvious, were anciently mere openings to the household and scot and lot franchise; for none but a freeman could claim to reside and trade in the town beyond a limited number of days, at least until the enactment of the staple laws in the reign of Edward III.; and residence at scot and lot was necessary to substantiate any claim to freedom whatever.

To continue this variety of claims in each town, in an age when the whole kingdom is enjoying the freedom which they formerly protected, was obviously unnecessary; and the Corporation Act, therefore, rejecting the forms, but returning to the spirit of an earlier age, not only throws open the franchise to the three years' scot and lot inhabitants, but rejects from the municipal franchise all who are not thus qualified, and consequently excludes by far the greater portion of the old freemen, who, however, had generally been for ages deprived of any share in municipal elections. At present, the "freemen" of the old municipal boroughs are thus, as such, wholly dissociated from the municipal institutions erected by the recent Act, as unworthy of a voice in them. But for the exercise of the parliamentary franchise, and for the enjoyment of the old common lands of the town, their existence is perpetuated as distinct corporations. For these purposes alone, the ancient claims by birth and servitude, wherever they existed, have been reserved by the Act to amend the representation, and by the Corporation Act, which latter, for the enjoyment of all claims to property, reserves also the right by marriage. The 107 represented boroughs in which there are "freemen" unqualified to be municipal electors, or "burgesses," are shown in the preceding enumeration tables, which gives a total of 26,191 "freemen" thus unqualified, though enjoying the parliamentary franchise. The privilege of exclusive trading recently maintained by the "freemen" in some of the old boroughs, as it still is in the city of London, was abolished by this statute, together with all exemptions from local tolls on the part of any person not already possessed of such a privilege. In the following 47 boroughs there appear however, to have existed, in 1835, claims on the part of the "freemen" to the exclusive enjoyment of certain public estates and endowments, which are reserved by the Corporation Act, though the excision of all title to the "freedom" by gift or purchase will rapidly terminate their corporate enjoyment in six of them.

The next Table (VI. p. 130, 131,) shows the results of the different modes of access to the franchise on the number enjoying it; formerly on the whole of the municipal boroughs, and now on the unaltered and the re-modelled municipalities respectively. They are classed according to the number enjoying the freedom, whether defined by charter, or left, as by the Corporation Act, indefinite. And not only is there a large increase in the number under the re-modelled institutions, but the substitution of the more substantial inhabitants, under the name of "burgesses," for the so-called "freemen," must also be borne in mind. The municipal registration of 1837, of which an imperfect abstract, relating only to the represented boroughs, appears in the last column, shows, too, an increase of about 16 per cent. on the first registration in 1835, which is the only one returned with sufficient completeness, to be used throughout these Tables. The total number of municipal electors in 1837, must, therefore, have exceeded 145,000, instead of being only 124,650, as in 1835.

But the change effected in the powers and privileges of the municipal commonalty by the recent Act, is still more complete than that in its constitution. The subjoined classification of the municipal councils in their former state, (p. 132, 133) which is the same in which the less important of them still remain, will show how little share the real community of each corporate town, or even the commonalties of "freemen" had or still have in their election; while, at present, in the re-modelled corporations, the commonalty of three years' scot and lot householders elect the municipal councils in the simple manner hereafter described.

In the remodelled municipalities, now universally designated "the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of such a borough," not only are the municipal electors required to be qualified by a three years' residence at scot and lot, but a principle of qualification by property, which had no existence in the old municipal system, is introduced in regard to the aldermen and councillors elected under the Corporation Act; who, in the larger boroughs, divided into four or more wards, must be elected from among the burgesses possessing at least 1000*l.* in property, or rated at 30*l.* annual value, and in the smaller boroughs, from those possessing at least 500*l.* in property, or rated at 15*l.* per annum. This principle is derived from the constitution of the Boards of Commissioners under Local Acts, in which it still more predominates.

The council of each remodelled municipality is composed, two-thirds of "Councillors," and one-third of "Aldermen;" the latter not differing at all in their functions from the former, but only in holding office twice as long. The councillors are elected by the burgesses at large from those of their own number, qualified as above described, for three years; one-third of the whole number elected by each borough, or by every ward in each borough, going out annually. The aldermen are elected by the council from its own number for six years, one-half of them going out every three years. In the whole 178 boroughs there are 1080 aldermen and 3240 councillors, making a total of 4320 members of these borough councils; the numbers in each borough varying from 12 to 48. The mayor is chosen annually by the council out of its own number, and is ex officio returning officer for the borough if it send members to Parliament, and a justice of the peace for the year of his office and the year following. The burgesses elect yearly, from their own number, two auditors of the accounts and two assessors for the other hand, the borough fund be not sufficient for the purposes above enumerated, the council are empowered to levy a borough-rate within their borough, with the same authority that is possessed by justices of the peace assembled at general and quarter sessions in any county; the accounts being always open to the councillors, and annually audited by the auditors, and published to the rate-payers. All acts of the council are decided by a majority of those present, who must be one-third of the whole number of the council to form a quorum. The ordinary meetings are held quarterly, and the special meetings after due notice. The council may appoint committees, at discretion; and is specifically required to appoint a watch committee, to take charge of the police; of which committee three are a quorum. The council is likewise invested with all special trusts, which, in whole or in part, have heretofore devolved upon the corporations under Local Acts, or otherwise; with the exception of trusts for charitable uses, which, by a lapse of legislation in their regard, have been placed in the hands of trustees, appointed for their administration in each borough by the Lord Chancellor.

The objects of local governments, to which the institutions of the corporate towns are directed, may be classed as follows:—

1. Administration of justice in local civil and criminal courts.
2. Direction of the police, and committal of offenders in summary punishment, or for trial at the higher courts.
3. Custody and superintendence of the prisons.
4. Administration of public property, and the levy of rates, when such property is not sufficient to meet the public expenses.
5. Economical superintendence over the public establishments generally, the appointment and dismissal of public servants, and the enactment of bye-laws.
6. Paving, lighting, cleansing, maintenance and improvement of thoroughfares and sewerage, and often the supply of water.
7. Maintenance of public buildings and works, such as the town hall, market-places, bridges, monuments, and walks.
8. Making and maintaining harbours, docks, and navigations.
9. Administration of special trusts for purposes of charity, where such trusts have been specially confided to municipal bodies.

In towns not corporate, the first five important classes of duties devolve upon the magistrates for the county, nominated by the Crown, and the remainder upon boards of trustees under local Acts, commonly designated Commissioners.

In the corporate towns of amplest ancient authority, the whole of these duties, had, from time immemorial, previous to the Corporation Act, been intrusted to the local institutions of the inhabitants ; and it is only the sixth class of objects, embracing the paving, lighting, &c., the management of which, previous to 1835, was found to be frequently intrusted to any local authorities, distinct from the municipal body and its council. But by this statute the administration of criminal justice in quarter sessions and petty sessions is vested in a recorder and magistrates specially commissioned for each borough by the Crown ; while the police, which was partially in the hands of the local boards of commissioners, together with the paving and lighting, is altogether made over to the municipal councils.

The municipal councils, indeed, still retain, in their character of representative bodies, most important trusts ; while the borough justices, neither presiding at quarter sessions, where the recorder is sole judge, on the one hand, nor having the management of the police nor the power to levy and expend rates on the other, are restricted to the functions ordinarily exercised in petty sessions and to committals ; a system very different from that which prevails in towns under the county magistrates. Moreover, the civil courts or courts of record still remain very commonly in the hands of the municipal councils, who appoint the judge, where the recorder is not judge, and every other officer. Their custody, too, of the gaols and other public buildings ; their administration of the borough fund, including the borough rates ; and their control of all expenditure, even for the purposes of justice and police, are all functions which elsewhere devolve upon the county magistracy. And the following abstracts of their expenditure will show that their powers are not narrow, nor their means insignificant. The accessible statistics of each department of the local government will fully elucidate these statements.

1. Justice.

All criminal jurisdiction in the old municipal boroughs was vested in a magistracy of various number, as variously appointed by the corporations themselves. The authority which these magistrates exercised was also very anomalously distributed. Universally, however, the magistrates were locally elected ; and the following table gives the numerical statistics of the criminal jurisdictions which they exercised ; the magistrates themselves being of course the judges in the borough courts of session, while the juries were generally selected by the town-clerk, or by some inferior officer, in methods neither uniform nor always just, as the analytical abstract appended to the Commissioners' Reports, from which these figures are derived, very conspicuously shows. But by the recent Act, the old local magistracies and criminal jurisdictions of all the boroughs included under its operation are abolished ; and the only magistrate of local appointment which it gives to the new corporations is the mayor, who also exercises the functions of a justice for the year following that of his office. It is provided, however, that the Crown may issue express commissions of the peace for the greater number of these boroughs, specially named, and for such of the smaller ones as may petition by their council to have a commission. And such of those having a commission of the peace, as may petition by their council to have a separate court of quarter sessions, may receive that privilege from Her Majesty in Council ; and thenceforward the jurisdiction of their magistrates becomes exclusive of that of the magistrates of the county, if it were formerly exclusive. In receiving a grant of quarter sessions, the council, however, must undertake to pay a certain salary to a recorder, appointed by the Crown for one or more boroughs, and who is a magistrate for the borough, and the sole judge on the bench. The borough magistrates are not required, like the county magistrates, to have a certain qualification by property. A clerk of the peace is appointed by the council, in boroughs which have their own court of quarter sessions, and a magistrates' clerk by the justices.

A return of all incorporated towns or boroughs to which commissions of the peace had been granted from the passing of the Act of the 5th and 6th of Will. IV., c. 76, to the 31st December, 1839, (Sess. 1840, No. 610,) together with one of all those which had obtained the privilege of a court of quarter sessions up to March 30, 1838, (Sess. 1838, No. 339,) enables us to place in juxtaposition with the former state of the borough criminal jurisdictions a summary of what must be very nearly their present state. The number of old boroughs which have received the new commissions of the peace appears from the former return to be no less than 139 out of the 178 included in the schedules of the Corporation Act, leaving only 39 whose sole magistrates are the locally elected mayor and late mayor. The total number of these borough magistrates appears to be 1229. The second return shows that no fewer than 79 of the larger boroughs have their own courts of quarter sessions, in place of the various courts of Oyer and Terminer, gaol delivery, general sessions, and quarter sessions, which many of them heretofore had, in addition to the courts of petty sessions, which are still universally held. Some of the smaller boroughs, with unaltered institutions, are seen to retain criminal jurisdictions of the most extensive character, with magistrates of local appointment. (See Table VIII., pp. 136, 137.)

The civil jurisdictions of the old corporations remain unaltered by the Corporation Act, except in a few minor particulars, chiefly required to carry out the purposes of that statute. The recorder (where there is now such an officer) has become judge of the civil court, where that office was not already occupied by a barrister of five years' standing; and elsewhere the officer of the borough, who has by charter or custom been the judge in the civil court, retains such office; the appointment to which, on occasion of vacancy, is vested in the town council. There was every variety, at the period of passing the Act, in the extent of the jurisdictions, which had no reference to the size of the place or its convenience for resort to other tribunals; and all these varieties are preserved as they appear in the annexed table, with this exception, that there may have been, under clause 118, a revival of some of the 69 borough courts of record, the right to hold which was in abeyance in 1835, at the passing of the Act; and that out of the 9 places having courts for personal actions for only 2*l.*, 10*l.*, and 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, some may now have a jurisdiction extending to personal actions for 20*l.* under the same clause, provided they have a barrister of five years' standing in the office of judge. The council are required to appoint a registrar and other necessary officers of the civil court, the jurisdiction of which is to comprise all within the boundary adopted for municipal purposes by the statute. The alterations effected by the statute in either the extent of the jurisdiction, or the precincts within which it is exercised, are too unimportant to require Table IX., which describes the state of the civil courts (see

The state of disorder and inefficiency into which these courts had fallen previous to 1835 may be presumed no longer to exist.

The jurisdiction of these Courts remaining the same, it is probable that, although designated in the statute "Borough Courts of Record,"

2. Police.

The police of the old corporate towns, previous to 1835, was in the most wretched condition; the corporations themselves having under their direction generally only the leet constables, or other temporary officers; and where there was any other police whatever, it was either a watch paid by subscription among the inhabitants, or a few men under a local Board of Commissioners, perhaps in avowed rivalry with the undisciplined constables of the corporation. But the Corporation Act requires of the council of each borough to nominate a watch committee, in which is vested the appointment and superintendence of so many police constables as may be necessary, with power to act anywhere within the borough, or within seven miles of it, and with the support, in case of necessity, of a body of special constables, yearly nominated by the magistrates. To the watch committee, all other police authorities within the borough are required to surrender their power and police accoutrements; and this committee is required to report the state of their police quarterly, to the Secretary of State for the Home Department; the council having power to make bye-laws for the prevention and suppression of all such nuisances as are not already punishable in a summary manner. The expenditure of the borough funds, under the head of "Police and Constables," in 1841, by the 178 remodelled corporations, was no less than 135,636*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, and to this sum should be added the coroners' charges, amounting to 6,110*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.*

3. Prisons.

There is a mere lock-up in every corporate town, and all the larger boroughs have their own prisons, for the permanent detention of criminal offenders, as well as for debtors. The council of a borough having its own Court of Quarter Sessions, if the borough prison be not sufficient, may contract with the county justices for the maintenance of the prisoners in the county gaol; or, with the consent of the Secretary of State, may make a similar contract with a neighbouring borough, and have its prisoners tried at the Sessions of that borough; a provision peculiarly requisite, considering the wretched state of many of the borough gaols in use at the time of this enactment. The expenditure out of the borough funds in 1841, under the head of "Maintenance of Gaols and of Prisoners," was 51,546*l.* 1*s.* 2½*d.*

4. Finances.

The following sheets present Abstracts of the Income and Expenditure, in 1840 and in 1841, of the 178 boroughs under the Corporation Act. These make a return annually to the Secretary of State, of the yearly accounts last audited; and the present abstracts are derived from the copies of their accounts last laid before Parliament (Session 1841, No. 233, and Sess. 1842, No. 302). The very few blanks which appear in the accounts for these years are supplied from those of preceding years, for the sake of totals approaching to accuracy.

A discrepancy will be observed between the totals on p. 140, and the totals of the totals in Table X. itself, arising from the apparent errors in bringing out the totals of the income and expenditure of each borough in the latter; errors which appear in the Parliamentary papers from which these accounts are abstracted, and which we have no means of correcting, as it is quite uncertain whether the wrong entries be in the items or in the totals. These errors, however, are not of such importance as to conceal in any mentionable degree the greatness of the revenues possessed by these corporations, or the application which is made of them. But the incumbrances upon these revenues amount to a small "national debt."

If, as is probable, there has been, since the date of these figures, in 1835, scarcely any reduction in the total of the debts due by the smaller municipalities included in the Corporation Act, the sum due by the whole of the remodelled boroughs will exceed 1,820,000*l.* The following Table, abstracted from the Reports of the Commissioners, shows the financial condition of the several boroughs whose institutions remain unaltered by that Statute; and their position with regard to income, expenditure, or debt, will not have undergone any great changes since the date of the Reports.

TABLE XIII.—Abstract of the Statements contained in the Commissioners' Reports of the Moneys annually received and expended on account of the Boroughs whose Institutions are unaltered by the Municipal Reform Act, 5 and 6 Wm. IV., c. 76; and of the amount of Debt due by any of those Boroughs at the period of their Reports, in 1835.

Ecclesiastical patronage, however, no longer appears among the items of corporate income, provision being made in the Corporation Act for the sale of all livings in the gift of Municipal Corporations, under the direction of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

The borough rates, levied to defray the expenses of the administration of justice, were formerly imposed by the borough magistrates, precisely as a county rate is assessed; and the transfer of the power of assessment to the council is an important change, though not without examples in the former state of the boroughs, under prescriptive custom, as well as under charters and statutes.* The return, No. 610, Session 1840, gives a total of 95 boroughs, in which a borough rate is levied by the town councils, under the provisions of the Corporation Act; and 81, in which rates are also levied under the local Acts enumerated in the Schedule (E) annexed to that statute. The amount of the former for the last preceding year to the close of which the accounts had been made up, was 127,920*l.* 8*s.* 6½*d.*, and of the latter, 141,802*l.* 14*s.* 11½*d.*; showing a decrease in the latter, since the year before the Act came into operation, of 17,493*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.* The annexed Table (XIV., pp. 159—161.) is an abstract from the return.

The constitution of the Boards of Commissioners levying rates under local acts has already been described, as well as the purposes to which the revenues are applicable. But it is impossible to describe the details of their expenditure without information which has yet to be gathered. The few succeeding remarks are, therefore, confined to the expenditure of the Borough Funds; the totals of the preceding accounts of the expenditure of the remodelled corporations being brought into the analytical arrangement of the functions of these bodies, which we have hitherto observed.

5. Public Establishments and Bye-Laws.

Perhaps the item of law expenses, one which is very heavy, being no less than £29,642. 19*s.* 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., can scarcely be classed under this head, which comprises expressly only the two following, viz.:—

Rents, rates, taxes, and insurance	£.	s.	d.
Salaries, pensions, and allowances to Municipal officers.	20,866	16	2 $\frac{1}{2}$
	80,757	11	5 $\frac{1}{4}$
	£ 101,624	7	7 $\frac{3}{4}$

The head of “Entertainments,” with its subordinate items of “Cook,” “Ringers,” and “Tavern Expenses,” though it appears in various parts of the Commissioners’ Reports, seems to be banished from the accounts of the remodelled corporations; and it is to be hoped that there has been some retrenchment with regard to the “Municipal Officers,” even to the extent of abolishing many of the offices which existed at the time of the Commissioners’ investigations, although some are certainly of great antiquity. The following lists of the principal and of the inferior officers, with the number of boroughs in which each office is mentioned to have been found, will at once indicate the functions which they exercised, the duties which really have to be discharged, and the necessity which existed of clearing away some of this antiquated machinery; in which, perhaps, the power of the Council to make bye-laws, not only for its own regulation, but for the suppression and avoidance of nuisances in the borough, could not be better exercised.

6. Paving, Lighting, Cleansing, &c.

The small proportion which the corporate expenditure upon these objects (38,319*l.* 2*s.* 11½*d.*) bears to the total sum of 142,593*l.* 13*s.* 0¼*d.*, levied under local Acts, chiefly to be applied to them, shows how completely this portion of the public service had escaped the old corporations; but it does not indicate how much of the latter is now in the administration of the remodelled councils, either partially under the terms of the local Acts, or wholly by the surrender of the trust to the corporation under clause 175 of the Corporation Act.

7. Public Buildings and Places.

Under this head we may class the items:—

Public works, repairs, &c.	£160,122	4	8
Markets and fairs	11,650	16	7
	£171,773	1	3

8. Harbours, Docks, and Navigation.

These are generally the subject of special trusts under local Acts, in which the corporations are part trustees: in some instances they possess the whole trust.

9. Charitable Trusts.

By clause 71 of the Corporation Act, it was provided that the charitable trusts, wherever such were held by municipal corporations, should remain in the hands of the old corporations until the 1st day of August, 1836, when the Lord Chancellor, unless Parliament should otherwise direct (and no further Act was passed on the subject), should make such orders as to him should seem fit for the administration of these trusts. Accordingly the Lord Chancellor appointed a Board of Trustees by name in each borough, for the administration of the municipal charities; and the number of these trustees in each borough, with the value of the charities at their disposal, will appear from the following abstract of the Return No. 266, Sess. 1839. The charities mentioned in the corporation accounts, to the amount of 16,496*l.* 8*s.* 11½*d.*, are contributions from the borough funds to charitable objects.

For the purpose of comparing the public expenditure of the boroughs with that of the parishes and counties, it may be mentioned that, in 1838, the poor's-rates amounted to 5,186,389*l.*, of which 683,865*l.* was for county-rates; and that in the following year, 1839, the highway-rates were 1,169,891*l.*, and the church-rates 506,812*l.* Of the institutions under which these sums are locally levied and expended, there may occur some future opportunity of presenting a statistical account, in continuation of the present.

Report of the Committee on Hospital Statistics.

THE present Report, which has been drawn up by a Committee of the Council of the Statistical Society of London, appointed in December, 1840, "to consider the best means of obtaining periodical enumerations of the patients in the London Hospitals," has been approved and adopted by the Council, and has been ordered to be published in the Society's journal, and to be printed for circulation amongst the supporters and authorities of the various medical charities of the metropolis. The objects of the Council in appointing the Committee will be sufficiently apparent after a perusal of the Report itself. The Committee is still engaged in inquiries connected with the vital statistics of the hospitals, and will be happy to receive information or suggestions from gentlemen interested in such matters, in furtherance of the purposes of their appointment.

Population of the Hospitals.—The metropolis contains ten general hospitals, besides the fever hospital, the small-pox hospital, the lock hospital, the hospital for seamen, several lying-in hospitals, and lunatic asylums.

A Return of the Number of Patients in the under-mentioned London Hospitals, and of the other Persons belonging to the respective Establishments, or resident on the night of the 6—7th of June, (From the return made by the Officers to the Census Commissioners.)
